Miss Fydget's Mistake.

"Please, ma'am, won't you give e a drink of milk?" Miss Fydget had just come in from long and bootless search through the pasture for a wandering brood of young turkeys which had been missed ince morning.

Sile was warm and tired; one boot ad hurst out on the side; her sunconnet hung iimp at the back of her read; her gray eurls were in true artistic confusion, and a vicious blackberry brier had torn her hands natil sire looked as if she might have been in a skirmish with the Zulus.

"But I wouldn't have miuded all hat," was Miss Fydget's melancholy comment to herseif, "if only I could ave found my young turkeys! They io say there is a company of tramps loaling about the country, and-" Just then the mild voice of an oid nan, sitting on the well-curb, broke in on the thread of her reflectionsan old man in a shabby gray coat actioned closely across his chest, shoes thickly coated with dust, a rude cane cut from the woods, upon which he ested his folded hands. Miss Fydget stured at the old man; the old man returned her gaze, tlerecatingly.

"Perhaps you are deaf, ma'aan," said the stranger, elevating his voice semi-tone or so higher. "No more than yourseif!" said

Miss Fydget, uaturally somewhat ir-"Would you have the kindness give me a little milk?"

Miss Fydget bethought herself of the floating rumor she had heard .-Perhaps this venerable vagrant was one of the very band now maranding hrough the vales aml glens of Roche mont; perhaps even now he had a corps of bloody-minded coadjutors hidden behind the stone wall, or under the moss-grown roof of the aneient smoke house. And Miss Fyd-

"Is a tramp, then, destitute of ail the privileges of humanity?" he ask-trudged away as fast as he could.

"Eh?" said Miss Fydget. "Tramps must live as well as other people," pleaded the old man. "Now, look at me!"

"Yes," said Miss Fydget. "1 looking at you, and a dirty, shabbylooking figure you are, I must say." "I've walked miles since morning, with nothing to eat or drink." "That's what they all say," said Miss Fydget, incredulously.

"Would it be a great stretch of your hospitality to give me a slice of bread and a drink of cool milk?" he ersisted. Miss Fydget stood for a minute.

ondering the petition in her mind. "Look here, old man," she said at last. "I know perfectly well that yon are a tramp, but I suppose you're annan, after all. There is a pile of knotty pine stumps under the shed, sixteen young turkeys. you may split a few for my cooking stove." "But, ma'am—"

"I knew how it would be," shrilly Interrupted Miss Fydget. "You're a deal too lazy to work, you'd rather starve than to do an honest day's work, any time.
"I beg your pardon," said the old

It was unnecessary, however. She noured out a bowi of milk, lirst thriftily pausing to skim it, and then cut a good thick slice of rye bread, taking care to secrete the bread knife when she was through. And then, seating herseif by the window, her thoughts ran back to the question of the missing brood of turkeys.

"He knows where they are, I'ii be anything!" sollloquized Miss Fydget. "And he shall tell use. Old wun! oid man, I say."

Crisfield would he your objective point, and a sail up the Pocomoke is not among the least of enjoyments, he ones passage through this lonely vale of tenrs. The expense from New York would be about four dollars, or say less than the cost of a day ni Long Branch or Saratoga, and the pleasure anywhere from four lo twenty fold. Il may be a hobby of mine, but I have an idea that the sumum bonum of summer enjoyment is reached at the smallest expense by precisely this kind of rambling, withoul definite purpose, other than lo keep cool in mind and body, and observe at your leisure how other people are living, and what sort of places they have picked out for un abiding place. Compare the delights of a man swellering at n huge caravnnsary with round of enting and hathing and daucing and sleeping in a little seven hy nine room, with all the way from a thousand to as many million of musquitoco and other creatures of the night to share his room und bed, and that of a Hohemian, who roams from whose breukfast and dinner the herry to he your obedient correspondent, and let me tell you how it is done. "DOWN ON THE SWANEE RIVER." Perhaps this can be accomplished by permitting you to accompany our Bohemian troupe ou Ihis iudelluite stroll to nowhere in particular. Starting out from Frauklin, a pert little town on Chincolengue Sound, which will do as well as nowwhere for a starting place in the early morning, we trainp along a rambling, straggling sort of a road, hordered here and there by a fence or wall, but generally unconfined; where mulberry trees and hushes banging with luscious nud tempting black-berries fringe the roadway, and patient-looking cows look up enquiringly and watch us out of sight from the yellow pastures, where the locust and cricket are piping a matin song, and some tiny species of field sparrow is chanting an interminable anthem, out into the low country where marsh and meadow, green with tall waving cane and melancholy willow, sweeps ouward toward the sound, and croaking bullfrog hoarsely protests against our intrusion. Now we happen upon a farm-house, where the jolliest of matrons proffers the foamicsl of milk in the shiniest of tin dippers, and assures us that the musk-melou she is carving for our delectation, is not only the aweetest, the juiciest and the best that ever grew, but it is absolutely and obetinately without money and without price. As for the morsel of fried chicken and corn cake, "why, bless your heart, houey, the dogs would get it if you didu't, and I reckon they never will miss it?" And we swallow the doubtful implication, while envyjug the canine that cau breakfast so delightfully without regretting the omission. Theu we mount a tedious hill, where hirch and scrub-oak shoot out from the underbrush, and the low wind sighs and nuurmurs umong complaining of a lost soul on the shores of some earthly Styx. Aud thus we come to the Pocomoke. A narrow, shallow, "wierd and worrled" atream, black as ink from the roots of the cypress trees that line its banks, flowing silently, noiselessly and painfully through the tall pines. Far to the eastwurd

we catch a glimpse of the green waters of the Sound, and there comes to us n dull monolonous roar thal is constant and unremitting, like the

Now around mansion, whose huge walls and vast the bend comes the smoking "Tangler," awashing and hissing and screaming from her shrill whistle, as and polished fleors, still remain though she were some mighty mon-ler of the Mississippi or the Swanee, ness, Mont of the old houses throughnstead of the snucy little narrowbeam that rules all undisturbed the hlack sullen waters of the Pocomoke. We lounge aboard, and steam and drift and gilds and wander aimlessly in and out the bearded forests and reedy marshes, and touch at dreamy old wharves and deserted wood piles and scream at every log hut by the shore, and send out huge volumes of fair and scarcely overdrawn picture moks and hiss and splutter and behave precisely as though we were nn within the past thirty years, from cean steamer touching at continental which date the decadence seems to

A COOL METREAT

Snow Hill is not that lodge in some vast wilderness for which some one once sighed in blank verse, nor does il hardly embrace "a boundless conliguity of shade." Yet were I desirous of seeking au absolutely cool etreat, where the voice of busybodies and creditors and other human ores was not likely to penetrate, I think I would give Snow Hill the preference. It is quite a little town of sandy streets and lanes, built upon white and glistening and the low f trees and woodbine, and creepers of various unknownbls species. Kent County and Its people. Browsin among the records of the "First Fam among the records of the "#" Jrss Fam-Ben,", The history of the House of Paca. How it ended in a tragedy,—The story

Next to Cecll, Kent Is the northern nost county of the Eastern Shoreand being separated from Haltimore by the mere bremith of the Chesapeake, is inclined to be a trifle more amblilous and to count liself among the suburban retreats of gentilly in se. "When you come to Kent, air," said a scion of the f.f's to me this morning, "you are in the very mildst of aristocracy. We have supplied Haltlmore with its n.erchant princes, Maryland with her Governors and the nation with Senators and statesmen by the score. And then, it is needless for me to tell you sir, what your eyes must have observed, that we have the preftiest girls and the finest women, hy Jove, in christendom." And I haven't the slightest manner of doubt but that every good eltizen of Kenf county believes implicitly in that sort of creed. Far he it from me to attempt to controvert so agreeable a doctrine. The ff's of Kent are among the most kiudly and hospitable of beings. Their generosity and good will extends to their man-servant and their maid-servant, their ox and their ass no less than to their stranger that is within their gates. From the rising of the sun to the going down of the same they delight in well-doing, and are not ashamed to argue and confess their errors while they discuss politics and philosophy with the harbarian Yankee. Their hearts, no less their water melon patches, are unconfined by barriers of pride or fear, and their minds as unrestricted and free as the wealth of their orchards. So much for Kent county in the abstract.

REPUBLICAN NORILITY. Without premeditation I have become intensely interested in the "First Families" of the Eastern Shore. To be sure one hears little else in this section, and to a superficial observer the inhabitants thereof are divided by a concurrent social line into the aristocracy and the cancille. so immeasurably wide, that no one her eight or uine children, live of ever dreams of altempting the passage. There is absolutely no end to this thing. When you are more fulrly among the "first-families" of Maryland and Virginia there is no way out of it except by way of the grave.

"And that reminds me, now that I have mentioned the Tilghman's and the Paca's, that I stumbled upon a wonderful old chap in Cambridge, to whom the whole family history of the Eastern Shore is an open book. My only regret in respect to Cologne is that a transient sickness revented my climbing the still higher pires of its vast Cathedral. In London we had the pleasure of rearing two Fourth of July sermons. ltoth were remarkable for elegance of diction, force and independence of thought. The one was preached by Rev. Stafford A Brook, and was a most seathing arraigument of England for her insular pride, rapacious greed, and mercenary spirit in all questions of national morality. This was vividly illustrated by reference to England's position during the late Franco-Prussian war, but especially by her attitude toward the United e, over and over again, and I would States during the war of the rebellion. Four of us from America who had the privilege of hearing the sermon could not refrain from a personal ex-

Miss Edith Everleigh flung berself ectulantly down in the nearest clinic nd declared that she was "mad"just'as unad as she could live.

Under ordinary circumstances, Miss Eith Everleigh, so far as ontward appearances went, was a very charming specimen of young maidenhood. But present circumstances, in the light of her nineteen years' experience, she regarded us altogether exraordinary, and therefore, if taken to task for her puckered brow and pouting lips would have averred that plotting in his own houshold, his they were quite justitlable. " I do think it's too mean for my thing," she went on, "when all my set are going to such nice places, that I've got to poke off to that stupid old farm, forty miles from nowhere. I continued interest and affection, and hate the country, and farmers are a set of boors, and papa is an old tyrant to make me go out there among "Edith? Edith!" exclaimed her mother, in a repraying voice, "why will you be so unreasonable? You know Dr. Halsey said emphatically that you unist have rest and quiet this summer, neither of which is to be obtained at the fashionable resorts where you wish to go. weeks that followed; of how theroughly convinced Miss Edith Evereigh became that life in a rural community migitt, and generally did, nesu more than cattle and acres and erogs, the signs of wet or dry, and the price of eggs and butter; or of-how she grew to delight in all the varying phases of Nature and the retining, updifting influences of her beneficent ompanionship.

All things earthly must come to an end, and pleasant visits, though long protracted, cannot last forever. Miss Edith Everleigh was at last compelled to tear herself away from the Thornton farmhouse. On the evening preceding her departure, when, as on that other evening savividly remembered, the golden nounlight glorifled all without, she was again-enriously enough at first seemed-intercepted at the rustle seat in the yard. Hy Hal Thornton, too, who as before now sought he with a purpose-to tell her something eigh demand for them has become so and to crave a boon. This time, however, it was not a tale of base deception that he last to relate; but that old, old story, so often told yet ever to be told nnew, and sweetest every dispatched from that greatest comtime it is heard, and the gift be egged for was not her pardon but her love.

Thornton very soon understood that their wish, for as fast friendship be- all who use it for all humors from the tween their children as was once between them, had been to the attermost fullilled.

Why It le eq. The reason why Dr. Havid Kenuedy's "Favorite Remedy" cures complaints of the Liver, Kidneys, Howels and Itland, is that it is compounded of the very remedies which Nature herself has provided for this purpose. Iteing at first scattered through the woods and fields, Dr. K. has collected thent, and after long und careful exeriment has condensed their virtues n the form which he now confidently offers to the sick and suffering. nto that this noisy, bustling, clattering workshop of a town, perched on n hill between the romantic Brandywhic and the whirling Chrisliana, with the broad Delaware scarcely n mile distant, could be anything icss than a genuine live manufacturing town in the midst of the New England hills. On the one side we are surrounded by a crescent shaped chain of high hills, sweeping with varying form and outline toward the spires and chimneys of old New Castle just a few miles below; on the other picturesque lowlands, the waters of the Brandywine join hands with the Christiana and pirouette away toward the yellow losom of Delaware bay. The situation is grand, irreproach uble and sufficient.

MORTH WEYMOUTH. The Pligrim parish held a meeting in their vestry, a week ago last Monday night, for the purpose of considering the propriety of building a new parsonage liouse, the matter having been discussed for some time. Mr. John E. Stoddard, a very enterprising member of the society, and a great worker in the interests of the church, stated to the meeting that he had visited quite a number of the society with a subscription paper, and bad already nearly fifteen hundred doliars subscribed for a uew parsonage. Mr. Stoddard thought that a lot of land could be bought and a good, convenient two story bonse, handsome in its architectural construction, built for about three thousand dollars. The meeting was very united in the movement, and after discussing the subject, a committee of six also consisting of the following gentlemen: Henry Newton, Eq., Dea. James Torrey, John E.
